

Oman Opens Airspace to Zionists

Oman's Civil Aviation Authority said that Omani airspace is now open to all civilian carriers, an indirect announcement that the Gulf State's airspace will also be open to 'Israeli' carriers. The Jewish entity's Foreign Minister Eli Cohen later thanked Omani Sultan Haitham bin Tariq al Said and said that the decision "will shorten the route to Asia, lower costs for 'Israeli' citizens and help 'Israeli' airlines be more competitive." Oman consenting to the Jewish entity's planes in its airspace opens up a corridor for Israeli commercial aircraft across the Arabian Peninsula and is an indication of the pragmatic, economics-driven incremental normalisation happening between Israel and the Gulf States. The change is convenient for the Jewish entity's carriers going to places like India and Australia and will shorten flight times by as much as two hours for some routes. Saudi Arabia announced in 2022 that it would open its airspace to all carriers and allow the Jewish entity's planes to fly over its territory, despite not having diplomatic ties with the Jewish entity.

Parliamentarians from nine Arab countries. Palestinian as well representatives, made up a delegation that visited Damascus reflecting a continuation in the thawing of relations with Assad, who for over a decade has been isolated from most of the region.
