Dangerous Extremists Locked up in Britain's first 'Jihadi jail' to stop them Radicalising other Inmates

Dangerous Muslim extremists have been locked up in Britain's first "jihadi jail" to stop them brainwashing other inmates. Nearly a dozen terrorists have been jailed in a "separation centre" at HMP Frankland in Durham and isolated from other prisoners. The "prison within a prison" is designed to reduce extremists radicalising other inmates by giving the worst terrorists their own cells, exercise yard and visiting centre. It will make it easier for the authorities to monitor the extremists and reduce the risk of them plotting atrocities behind bars. They will be subjected to intensive deradicalisation programmes. Lee Rigby murderer Michael Adebolajo and extremist preacher Anjem Choudary could be among them. Others who spread views that might incite others to commit terrorist offences, or who are undermining security in jails, could also be moved to one of the facilities. Prisons Minister Sam Gyimah said the isolation centres were "an absolutely crucial element of our wider strategy to tackle extremism in prisons and ensure the safety of the wider public." The Ministry of Justice declined to comment on which prisoners would be shifted to the facilities. Last month, Adebolajo was said to be "brainwashing" fellow inmates in HMP Frankland. The terrorist was described as spending "most of his waking hours preaching his distorted form of Islam to anyone who will listen", according to the Daily Mirror. The new centre at HMP Frankland was one of the main recommendations of a review which found evidence of "charismatic" prisoners acting as "self-styled emirs" to radicalise other inmates. It also suggested that "cultural sensitivity" among staff towards Muslim prisoners could "inhibit the effective confrontation of extremist views". The new isolation centres will be used to target all forms of extremism in jails, including Islamist and extreme far-right ideologies. Figures indicate that authorities are managing more than 1,000 inmates who have been identified as extremist or vulnerable to extremism at any one time. It is ironic that on the one hand, the UK government pushes for integration of Muslims in society, and on the other hand, it seeks to isolate them. Is the UK government so bankrupt of ideas that instead of countering Islam with thoughts it now seeks to lock up Muslims in separate prisons?

Saudi Arabia 'is undoubtedly at the top of the list' of Countries Funding Islamist Terrorism in Britain

Saudi Arabia is 'at the top of the list' of countries exporting extremist Islam to the UK, a new report says. The kingdom has engaged in a 60-year, multi-million dollar campaign to advance its extremist brand of Wahhabi Islam in British Muslim communities, according to a study by the Henry Jackson Society. This has been achieved through endowment grants to mosques, the funding of Islamic education institutions and the training of imams, the report authors say. 'A clear and growing link' can be drawn between this overseas money, which originates in several Gulf states and Iran, and atrocities in the UK and throughout Europe, the society found. The report identifies what it calls 'an intentional and systematic policy' by these states to 'advance an illiberal and at times anti-Western version of the Islamic religion' in Western countries. How much money has been allocated to this effort is unknown because the majority of it remains secret, the report admits, but the amount is though to have increased in recent years. 'Indications of the kind of influence that such funding can have... can be seen through the prevalence of Islamist extremist preachers and literature, including the use of Saudi school textbooks,' the report reads. 'This combined with scholarship programmes that bring clerics to Saudi Arabia for training, has gradually contributed to changing the climate of religious belief and practice in many of the West's Muslim communities. 'As well as promoting hardline Wahhabi practices to Muslim communities that formerly identified with other Islamic traditions, this phenomenon has created a challenge for moderate voices and empowered extremists.' The Henry Jackson Society is calling for a public inquiry into the issue and asks the government to introduce laws forcing Islamic organisation to declare certain types of finance received from overseas, and any conditions placed upon its use. The Home Office already commissioned a closed-door inquiry into funding for Islamic extremist groups in the UK back in 2015 as part of a Coalition deal to expand airstrikes in Syria and Iraq. It was understood that the report would largely focus on Saudi Arabia, but in May this year the Home Office announced the research has yet to be completed. Even if the report is finished, the findings may never be made public because of the 'very sensitive' nature of the material, a spokesman said. Prime Minister Theresa May, who visited Saudi Arabia earlier this year, has been accused of 'kowtowing' to the kingdom by 'suppressing' the report. Tom Wilson, who wrote the report for the Henry Jackson Society, said: 'There is a clear and growing link between foreign funding of Islamist extremism and the violent terrorism we have witnessed across the UK and Europe.' The key now is to get ahead of the issue and find out the full extent of what has been going on. A public inquiry would go some way to informing the debate. [Source: Daily Mail]

The report timing coincides with desperate UK efforts to protect Qatar's growing isolation spearheaded by the Saudi's under America tutelage. The Anglo-American struggle for the Middle East still continues to create upheavals for the region.

Peace in Afghanistan is only possible if Kabul and Islamabad join forces and put an end to decades of US interference in the region. The practical way to accomplish this feat is through the re-establishment of the rightly guided Khilafah state (Caliphate), which will end cruder interference.
