The Syrian and Iranian Regimes Continue the Criminality Chain in All its Forms

(Translated)

News websites reported the news of the huge fire that devoured a number of ancient houses and shops in the Sarouja Market, west of the Umayyad Mosque in Damascus.

It is noteworthy that the fire spread to the Historical Documents Center, which is run by the Directorate of Historical Documents in the Directorate of Antiquities and Museums of the criminal regime. The fire devoured more than five million documents that included family names, genealogies, and lineage dating back to the Ottoman era.

All indications indicate that this fire is part of a series of actions undertaken by the Syrian and Iranian regimes to create a demographic change in and around Damascus. And this comes after the crime of destruction and displacement of its people from it, and then the crime of burning all the documents that prove the ownership of the original people of the land.

It is a new serious crime added to the series of crimes committed by the Syrian and Iranian regimes and their militias in order to give nationalities to these militias in ash-Sham (Levant) and give them ownership of estates/properties after burning everything that reveals the truth about their usurpation of the land to be a dagger inserted in the body of the people of ash-Sham.

The accountability of the criminals who killed the people of the revolution of Ash-Sham and expelled them from their homes will be soon, Allah willing, at the hands of the honest people of this Ummah, after overthrowing the criminal regime and establishing the rule of Islam on its ruins.
